

Collagen-stimulating agent and microneedling radiofrequency for neck aging sign treatment: my personal strategy and clinical observations

Shangli Lin

Shangli Dermatologic & Aesthetic Clinic

Collagen-stimulating agents have long been used to replace the volume and to restore the volume in areas that lose volume in the aging process and the collagen produced by the host through the stimulation process provides long-lasting results over time. On the other hand, microneedling RF, in recent years, is another way of treating dermal indications including wrinkles, pores and laxity through the dermal repairing process after RF energy is delivered in the desired depths in the dermis.

Both of the options can deliver satisfying results when candidates are properly selected. In this presentation, I will share my personal experiences of treating the neck aging signs with both options and discuss my personal rationale of case selection