LIFELONG GAIN FROM SWIMMING

- (1) My training for competitive swimming started from the tender age of 8 for a continuous period of over 10 years until the beginning of my University studies in 1998. Such training has far-reaching effect on my life because it has toughened me a lot both physically and mentally and has enlightened and thus convinced me that the only key to success is ‘hardworking’.
- (2) The early experience of my numerous winning and awards in competitions had not only taught me not to let myself to be carried away by my success but rather had motivated me to make further improvement in my preparation for the competitions ahead. And I will adopt the same approach in meeting the future challenges of my medical career.
- (3) And last but not the least, it may be worth mentioning that I also possess a special quality which I gained from my training for competitive swimming that might not be found in other candidates – the courage to face successive failure and the determination thereafter to work even harder with a view to achieving my goal!
